Wild Turkeys in Wisconsin TV Special to air statewide in April

Wild Turkeys in Wisconsin, a one-hour special hosted by Outdoor Wisconsin host Dan Small and produced by the Outdoor Heritage Education Center (OHEC), will air on several broadcast and cable networks in April, according to the show's executive producer, OHEC founder Mark LaBarbera.

"The wild turkey is a magnificent bird," LaBarbera said. "The abundance of wild turkeys today throughout Wisconsin is a testament to the success of conservation, professional wildlife management and the restoration of a species that was absent from our landscape as recently as the 1970s. Our goal in this program is to help viewers understand the challenges and rewards of maintaining healthy wild turkey populations."

The program explores the history and biology of the wild turkey, with an emphasis on the restoration and management of wild turkeys in Wisconsin. Throughout the program, Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources and National Wild Turkey Federation staff will discuss turkey population dynamics, the economic impact of wild turkeys, hunting opportunities, harvest data, habitat management, the hunter's role in conservation, urban/suburban turkeys and other topics.

"I'm really excited about this program," Small said. "It will be similar in approach to our annual Deer Hunt Wisconsin show, which has informed and entertained viewers for more than 20 years."

Funding for the production was provided by the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources through the turkey stamp program, with additional support from the National Wild Turkey Federation and Hunting Works for Wisconsin.
